

1. present participles

2. past participles

The present participles and past participles of verbs are often used as adjectives. So they agree in number and gender with the noun they modify, just like regular adjectives. The distinction between adjectives derived from present and past participles is similar to that between -ing and -ed adjectives in English: fatigant (tiring) / fatigué (tired).

- 🔊 Oh, la, la, Tex est fatigué après ses cours.
Pff... quand il parle de philosophie, Tex est parfois fatigant.
- Oh, la, la, Tex is tired after his classes.
Pff... when he talks about philosophy, Tex is sometimes tiring.

present participles used as adjectives

The present participle is formed by dropping the -ons ending from the nous form in the present tense and adding -ant.

- 🔊 Tex est un tatou intéressant. (intéresser)
Tammy est une fille charmante. (charmer)
Edouard et Corey sont des animaux amusants. (amuser)
Bette et Fiona sont des créatures surprenantes. (surprendre)
- Tex is an interesting armadillo.
Tammy is a charming girl.
Edouard and Corey are amusing animals.
Bette and Fiona are surprising creatures.

past participles used as adjectives

Past participle formation depends on the verb class (-er, -ir, -re, or irregular).

- 🔊 Tex et Tammy forment un couple uni. (unir)
Pauvre Joe-Bob! Il est perdu. . . comme d'habitude. (perdre)
Edouard et Tex sont des Français peu américanisés. (américaniser)
Bette est trop gâtée. (gâter)
- Tex and Tammy form a united couple.
Poor Joe-Bob! He's lost ... as usual.
Edouard and Tex are not very Americanized French people.
Bette is too spoiled.

Note that past participles used as adjectives may have a passive meaning, and thus be followed by an agent introduced by par (by) or de (with):

- 🔊 Bette est une chatte entourée d'admirateurs.
Bette est très gâtée par ses admirateurs.
- Bette is a cat surrounded by admirers.
Bette is very spoiled by her admirers.
- 🔊 Joe-Bob: Corey, tu as vu? Il y a un article absolument choquant dans le Daily Texan. Il s'agit d'un prof qui a des personnalités multiples!
- Corey: Ah oui, je l'ai eu le semestre passé. Bien sûr, j'ai raté mon examen, mais au moins ses conférences étaient plus amusantes que celles des autres profs.
- Joe-Bob: Corey, did you see? There's an absolutely shocking article in the Daily Texan. It's about a prof who has multiple personalities.
- Corey: Ah, yes. I had him last semester. Of course, I failed my exam, but at least his lectures were more amusing than the other profs'.
